I do not have experience with this newer version of the fire control so most of what we discussed would not apply to this incident. Tom advises that everything concerning the fire control system on this rifle was within factory specs with no visible defects. The older style M700 rifles would intermittently malfunction even when all appeared to be within specs. This was and is well documented with customer complaints etc. Have you made request for all customer complaints and factory production/inspection records to see if the XP version has a similar history early in the life cycle of this version ? With the rifle being within specs and given the occurrence this type of evidence would be critical so if you have not done so I advise you immediately get this out in a RFP.

Also, Tom advises that a recall is underway. Do you have info on this you could forward me? Lastly, do you have a statement or police report with a statement from the shooter that you could provide me? Anything that you could send me to review would be appreciated.
